Orientation	Once upon a time, there lived a couple named Rama and Sinta. They lived happily until one day, the King asked them to leave the Palace and lived in the forest. Rama was suppossed to be the next King, but the King of Ayodhya new wife was jealous. He convinced King Rama of Ayodhya to overthrow of the Palace. Sinta and Rama loved very much, so she went with him into exile.
Events	One day, Rama and Sinta went on a hunt in the forest. Sita saw a beautiful golden deer running near them. She asked Rama to catch it for her. While Rama was chasing the deer, a wicked king, called Rahwana, appeared. Rahwana thought Sita was very beautiful, so he kidnapped her. Sinta screamed, but she was not strong enough to fight him. Rahwana took her to his kingdom and tried to convince Sinta to marry him, but she refused.
	Anoman, a white monkey, tried to save Sinta. He insisted she to return with him. However, Sinta refused because she wanted Rama to take her back to the palace. When Rama found out that Rahwana took his wife, he was very angry. Soon he and Anoman went to Rahwana's Palace to fight Rahwana. After a fierce battle, Rama and Anoman defeated Rahwana and they carried Sinta back to the Palace. Everyone was so happy because Rama was back and they appointed him became the King.
Complication	Sinta thought their lives would be happy, but she was wrong. Rama was still suspicious about her purity. He believed stories that Sinta had been unfaithful when Rahwana held her captive. Sinta pleaded Rama and cried for his mercy, but he refused. There was only one thing she could do to convince Rama. She would burn herself on the fire to prove that she was still a virgin. If she was really pure, the fire would not burn her.
Resolution	The flames were hot and the fire roared, but Sinta walked out without any burns. Finally, Rama and all of the people in the kingdom believed her.
